

A MESSAGE FROM ROYAL BROMPTON HOSPITAL

Our innovative 'Singing for Breathing' project is based on the belief that singing is beneficial to our mental and physical health. Our medical specialists are working with respiratory patients to increase both their confidence in their breathing and their lung capacity. Knowing that Ian wanted to teach the world to sing, we believe that he would approve of our project. We will be researching the impact of singing on breathlessness in conditions such as asthma, chronic obstructive lung disease (COPD) and emphysema.

IAN ADAM

*“I’d like to teach
the world to sing”*

IAN ADAM was regarded as one of the foremost singing teachers in the world, fêted by stars of Theatre, Film and Dance. Many of them will be appearing on stage on 24th February to pay their own personal tributes to Ian.

This concert is to celebrate Ian’s life, work and talent. It is an opportunity for all those whose lives were touched and affected by Ian to show their gratitude and thanks, but above all, to show their love for this special man.

Ian really could teach anyone to sing – eventually. Stories of his encouragement and patience and technique are legend...

Ian also firmly believed that singing could improve some respiratory conditions.

ROYAL BROMPTON HOSPITAL, an internationally renowned specialist centre for the treatment and research of heart and lung disease, has introduced singing lessons to help improve the quality of life and morale of patients. All profits from the performance will directly benefit their important work.
